Returning to Public Employment in New York State

Two sections of the RSSL — Section 211 and Section 212 — may affect your return to public employment. If you return to public employment, you may still be able to collect your pension, depending upon:

How much you earn after you return to public employment; and

Your age.

If you are under age 65, you can return to public employment without approval or reduction in your retirement benefit as long as your calendar year earnings are less than the Section 212 limit (the limit has been set at $30,000 since January 1, 2007).

If your earnings will be more than the Section 212 limit, the RSSL permits your employer to seek approval to hire you under Section 211. However, there are specific procedures that must be followed and strict standards that must be met.

There is generally no restriction on your earnings beginning in the calendar year you turn 65, unless you return to public office. For information about holding an elected position after retirement, please read Holding Elected Positions After Retirement.

Holding Elected Positions After Retirement

If you are elected or appointed to an elective position that you did not hold before you retired, your earnings are unlimited and will not affect your pension. For example: You retired from your full-time job driving a school bus a year ago, are collecting your pension, and this year you were elected to your city council. Your council member salary is not limited and will not affect your pension.

However, if you continue to work in the same elected office you held before retiring, and your date of membership is on or after July 26, 1995, Section 212 limits will apply to your earnings, regardless of age. If your date of membership is before July 26, 1995, Section 212 limits will apply to your earnings only until you turn 65.
